DHOLDA bike "De Lelijkaard" (The Ugly One)

I want to give my reaction to the copying of the "Lelijkaard" (a motorbike designed and constructed by my father) by a group of people who call themselves the Honda-Legends.

Contrary to what they say there is no contact anymore between them and DHOLDA and they had never received approval to copy the "Lelijkaard" as they claim on their website.

It also shows their lack of respect that they thank me, on their website, for lending them the motorbike ... they could also have thanked me for all the parts ... parts who should have been controlled by both of us and who I never seen back again.

Look, all over the world there are people who are busy with motorbikes, and I think this is fantastic! These people, contrary to the ones mentioned above, try to achieve this and try to get higher up without making use of someone's name, logo, colors, Or, how do you understand it, when, without you being informed they start an association with your company's name, when they copy your logo (form, colors, typeface), when they copy your motorbike,

All this and also "by dedicating their website to my father" (how deep should a human cases to steal the work of a deceased person and dedicate it to him) shows that they obstinately try to remain connected with DHOLDA and take advantage of the reputation DHOLDA has in the "classic racing" environment.

Some people are never ashamed.

For all you DHOLDA fans, don't let this worry you. I will not let it happen anymore! I have found out that one can't be good to everyone and be friends with everyone.

Remember so that DHOLDA and Honda-Legends have, not by far, something in common.

I wish all you bikers a lot of driving pleasure.

With sporty greetings,

Mike
